

Eliza Tully Maginnis.

Mrs. Eliza Tully Maginnis, daughter of the late Oramel Whittlesey, died at her home in Salem, New London County, Conn., Aug. 4. She had been an invalid for many years. Born in Salem Oct. 8, 1826, she at an early age became a proficient instructor of music and assisted her father in the management of Music Vale Seminary, which he founded and which attained a remarkable celebrity throughout the United States. It was the first normal academy of music in the country, and its pupils became teachers of repute. Mr. Whittlesey was a public-spirited citizen, and was prominent in the affairs of Eastern Connecticut before the war. The daughter married J. T. Maginnis, a son of Edward Maginnis, a pioneer leather merchant in the "Swamp," this city. Her husband was among the first to respond to the call for volunteers in 1861. While he, as Lieutenant of Company E, Eighteenth Connecticut Volunteers, was fighting at the front, she, an ardent patriot, was active at home in ways in which women could best serve the cause of the Union. Her husband was killed in battle at Piedmont, Va., in 1864.

Mrs. Maginnis had a large circle of friends and enjoyed a reputation for clever correspondence. She took great interest in local reminiscences and genealogy, and was frequently called upon to contribute to works of family record and State history. In her Salem home she had preserved a valuable collection of heirlooms, and at the Groton centennial celebration she was one of the largest individual contributors to the loan exhibition.

She leaves a daughter, Mrs. T. Hunt Sterry of Brooklyn, and a grandchild, Miss Maconda Fillmore of Buffalo. Two sisters survive her. They are Mrs. Sarah V. Pratt of Kansas City and Miss K. B. Whittlesey. Charlotte Maconda, the soprano, is a niece, and Bela Lyon Pratt, the sculptor, is a nephew of Mrs. Maginnis. The interment was at Moss Wood Glen Cemetery, in Salem.

John Ambrose Deady.

John Ambrose Deady of 59 Wall Street, a well-known lawyer, died yesterday morning at the Maplewood, Pittsfield, Mass. He suffered from cirrhosis of the liver, and had been ill for eight months, but gave up professional work only about five weeks ago. He had been the senior member of the firm of Goodrich, Deady & Goodrich since the retirement of Justice William W. Goodrich on becoming President of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court for the Second Department.

Mr. Deady was born in this city Sept. 26, 1844. He was graduated at Amherst in 1864 and taught for two years in the House of Refuge on Randall's Island. In the meantime he was studying law, and he was graduated at Columbia Law School in 1868, admitted to the bar, and at once entered the law office of Mr. Goodrich. He devoted his attention chiefly to practice in the Admiralty and Surrogates' Courts. He was engaged in the Haskin and Ivison will cases, recently tried before the Surrogate. He acted as referee in many law suits, and had an unusually wide acquaintance among members of the bar, with whom he was extremely popular. He had an engaging personality and great kindness of heart.

He was President of the Harlem Club for two years and a member of the Manhattan, Harlem Democratic, and Players' Clubs and the Amherst College Alumni Association. In 1894 he was a member of the State Constitutional Convention. He was never married. A brother of Mr. Deady lives in this city, and his father is a resident of Springfield, Mass. Arrangements for the funeral have not yet been made.

Lewis Beach Eddy.

Lewis Beach Eddy, well known as a business man in this city and throughout the West, died at his home, 8 Commerce Street, Thursday night. He was the son of Joseph A. Eddy, one of the pioneer merchants of St. Louis, and the nephew of Dr. Worcester Beach of this city.

He was born in St. Louis, but moved to New York fifteen years ago. While in the West he was engaged in zinc mining at Carondelet, Mo., and in coal mining at Kingston, Ill. His business here was that of a promoter. Five years ago he organized the Cracker Trust, and he was successful in a number of similar enterprises. His office was at 155 Broadway. He died in his fifty-fourth year.

Mr. Eddy leaves a wife and a son nine years old.

Robert McKinstry.

Robert McKinstry, who practically controlled the export apple trade of this city, died Thursday at his home, 2,050 Madison Avenue. He had a serious attack of pneumonia about three months ago, and never recovered from it. He was born seventy-nine years ago in Columbia County, this State, and came to live in this city when ten years old. He owned a large farm at Greendale, N. Y., on which he had planted 30,000 fruit trees, many of them with his own hands. He leaves a widow, a son, and daughter. The burial will be in the family plot in Greenwood.

R. Taylor Scott.

Major R. Taylor Scott, Attorney General of Virginia, died at Warrenton, Va., yesterday. Born in 1834, he was graduated from the University of Virginia in 1856, and began the study of law under his father, a distinguished lawyer and leader of the Whig Party. During the war he assisted in forming and equipping a company, which was assigned to the Eighth Virginia Regiment of Volunteers, in which he was made Captain. After the war he was elected to the State Convention, called by military authority, and in 1881 to the General Assembly, where he served one term. In 1889 he was elected Attorney General of the State, to which office he was twice re-elected.

Mrs. Jesse Johnson.

Mrs. Jesse Johnson, wife of United States ex-District Attorney Jesse Johnson, died yesterday of apoplexy at the Ocean Avenue Hotel, Patchogue, L. I. Mrs. Johnson had been an invalid for the past fifteen years, and was spending her sixteenth Summer at the house.

Mrs. Johnson was born at Key West, Fla., about fifty years ago, and had lived in Brooklyn since 1860. She was well known socially, and devoted a great deal of her time to charities. She is survived by her husband and one son. The body will be brought to the family home, 308 Clinton Avenue, Brooklyn, to-day. The funeral will probably be held to-morrow.

Ferdinand F. Beck.

The death of Ferdinand F. Beck, formerly of this city, was yesterday announced as having taken place in Paris on Wednesday. Mr. Beck was an artist, and lived at 43 West Sixty-first Street. A few months ago he had a stroke of paralysis in the side and went to Paris for treatment. He took his family with him, and his wife remarked to her neighbors that she did not believe he would ever recover.

"Crazy Sandy" Baker Dead.

Nathaniel Baker, known as "Crazy Sandy," died at the Flatbush Hospital yesterday morning. Baker was the oldest inmate of the institution, having been there since 1853. He was admitted as a slightly demented patient, and in the course of a few years became assistant engineer. He had no relatives or friends.

Obituary Notes.

JAMES J. REGAN, a well-known manufacturer of shoddy and knit goods, at Rockville, Conn., died yesterday. Mr. Regan was about sixty-two years old.

JOHN P. CARROLL died on Thursday after a short illness at his home, 112 Bushwick Avenue, Brooklyn. He had for years been engaged in the paper and rope business in the Fifteenth Ward, where he was well known. He was one of the first paper manufacturers in the Eastern States. He leaves a wife and six children.

Jockey Fred Day Buried.

Fred Day, the former jockey, who died at the Norwegian Hospital, Brooklyn, on Tuesday, was buried yesterday in the Lutheran Cemetery. Day was injured by being thrown from a horse a few years ago, and was since troubled with mental derangement. During the last months of his life Day lodged wherever night overtook him on Coney Island. There is a fund for disabled jockeys, to which the public and the racing associations contribute, and to which several thousand dollars were added by a charity day at Morris Park this Spring. The custodians of this fund, on learning that Day would probably be buried in the Potter's Field, paid his funeral expenses.
